

Social Media Growth Strategy Notes

Posting consistency matters more than posting frequency alone. Accounts that post 3-4 times per week consistently tend to outperform accounts that post daily for two weeks and then go silent, because platform algorithms favor predictable engagement patterns.

Short-form video content (Reels, Shorts, TikToks) currently gets significantly higher organic reach than static image posts on most platforms, since these platforms are actively pushing video to compete with each other.

Hook the viewer in the first 2-3 seconds of a video. Most drop-off happens almost immediately if the opening does not create curiosity or show the payoff early.

Engagement in the first hour after posting strongly influences how far a post is distributed, since the algorithm uses early engagement as a signal of quality.

Repurposing one piece of long-form content (like a podcast or blog post) into 5-10 short clips or graphics is far more efficient than creating unique content for every single post.

Community engagement - replying to comments and DMs - signals to the algorithm that an account is active and worth promoting further, and also builds audience loyalty over time.
